Clauses

A clause is part of a sentence. A clause must contain a verb (a doing or being word). The main clause in a sentence makes sense on its own; it can usually be written as a sentence by itself. A subordinate clause gives further meaning to the main clause but does not make complete sense on its own.

Look at this sentence.

As time went by, the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom.

The main clause is "the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom" – it could be a sentence on its own. The subordinate clause is "as time went by" – it is not a complete sentence on its own.

Write down the main and subordinate clauses in the sentences below.

In a small town, there was a small house in which lived a young man, his wife, and the young man's sister.

main clause:

subordinate clause:

They returned to the great tree again and again, hoping to hear the words that would ease their misery.

main clause:
subordinate clause:	••••••

As the days passed, the unwatered, uncared for mango tree started drying up and its leaves began to fall.

© Dorling Kindersley Limited [2010]

Clauses

A clause is part of a sentence. A clause must contain a verb (a doing or being word). The main clause in a sentence makes sense on its own; it can usually be written as a sentence by itself. A subordinate clause gives further meaning to the main clause but does not make complete sense on its own.

Look at this sentence.

As time went by, the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom.

The main clause is "the people grew weary of hearing the words of wisdom" - it could be a sentence on its own. The subordinate clause is "as time went by" - it is not a complete sentence on its own.

Write down the main and subordinate clauses in the sentences below.

In a small town, a young man, his wife, and the young man's sister all lived together.

subordinate clause: In a small town

Again and again, the people returned to the great tree, but no voice spoke to them.

main clause: the people returned to the great tree two subordinate clauses: Again and again, but no voice spoke to them

.....

A short while later, the neglected mango tree lost its leaves and it began to die.

two main clauses: the neglected mango tree lost its leaves

it began to die

subordinate clause: A short while later

This page features an exercise in identifying main clauses in longer sentences. This can be difficult for less-fluent readers who need encouragement to read words in groups rather than individually. Explain that a clause must contain a verb (otherwise it's a phrase).

© Dorling Kindersley Limited [2010]

